tæfl, e; f. es; n. (?) : tæfle, an (?) ; f. Properly a board for the playing of a game. But the word seems also used of a game played on such a board: cf. the use of the word tables at a later time:—Wyþ pleyynge at tables oþer atte chekere, R. Glouc. 192, 3. Kueade gemenes of des and of tables huer me playþ uor pans, Aynb. 45, 16. Tabules tabella (15th cent.), Wrt. Voc. i. 202, col. 2. See also Strutt's Sports, Bk. iv, c. 2. The word seems to denote also a die used in playing a game. What was the precise nature of the games, to which this word and related forms are applied, does not appear; some of the references below would imply that games of chance are meant, and this would be in keeping with the love of gaming which Tacitus, Germ. c. 24, noticed among the Germans. But games of skill like chess may sometimes be meant. In Icelandic tafl is used of chess or draughts, as well as of dicing, and the Danes in England seem to have played chess (see Thrupp's Anglo-Saxon Home, c. xvi, sec. 7); and in O. H. Ger. scach-zabel = scacarium. Among the Welsh, too, was a game something like draughts, called taulburdd (Thrupp, p. 388):—Tefl, tebl, teblae alea, Txs. 36, 6. Tæfl, Wrt. Voc. ii. 8, 7. III. as a legal term, (1) vouching to warranty. The word denotes one step in the proceedings of a suit for the recovery of property, which was found in one man's possession and claimed by another, who alleged that it had been stolen or had strayed from him. The peculiar character of the process to which it refers was determined by the formalities insisted upon by the law when property changed hands. At such a transaction the presence of witnesses was necessary (L. Ed. i. Th. i. 158, 11; L. Edg. H. 4; Th. i. 258, 22; L. Edm. C. 5; Th. i. 253, 8; L. C. S. 23; Th. i. 388, 21; 24; Th. i. 390, 4), and one responsible person (geteāma), who according to lne's laws must not be a þeow man (L. In. 47; Th. i. 132, 5), was to be fixed upon as representing the party that made the sale or transfer, and to him, if a question subsequently arose as to ownership, the new owner might refer (tīman) in support of his right; this referring the property to the party who had sold it was teām. In cases of undivided ownership the geteāma would be the person making the sale; in cases of joint ownership one of the parties would be taken. The proceedings in a suit in which teām was resorted to seem to have been somewhat as follows. The plaintiff, who made claim to property on the plea that it had been stolen from him, had to give security that he would carry on his case: Warige hine, se ðe his āgen befōþ, ðæt hē tō ælcān teāme hæbbe getryfne borh, L. Eth. ii. 9; Th. i. 290, 6; Wil. I. 21; Th. i. 477, 11; the defendant had to declare how the property came into his hands, and to give security that he would produce his geteāma in court: Gif hwā befō ðæt him losod was, cenne se ðe hē hit at befō hwanon hit him cōme, sylle on hand and sette borh (pledge himself and find security) ðæt hē bringe his geteāman in ðær hit besprecen biþ, L. Eth. ii. 8; Th. i. 288, 15. On the case being brought into court (which was to be held in cynnes sele, L. H. E. 7; Th. i. 30, 18; 16; Th. i. 34, 7, or kyninges burh: Ælc teām beo on ðæs kyninges byrig, L. Eth. iii. 6; Th. i. 296, 4), the plaintiff made oath, that he prosecuted his suit lawfully and fairly, L. O. 2; Th. i. 178, 10, and without malice, 4; Th. i. 180, 8; the defendant on his side made oath that he had had no part in the alleged robbery, but had acquired the property in a lawful manner, 3; Th. i. 178, 16, and was guiltless, 5; Th. i. 180, 14. He was now bound to produce witnesses of the transaction which resulted in his acquiring the property in dispute, or teām was denied him: Būton hē ðara oðer (certain witness) hæbbe, nele him mon nænne teām gefaþian, L. Edg. H. 4; Th. i. 260, 2. Ne beo ænig man æniges teāmes wyrdre būton hē getryfwe gewitnyss hæbbe, L. C. S. 23; Th. i. 388, 20. Ne beo ðær nān teām, 24; Th. i. 390, 6. If the witness was forthcoming, the geteāma had to be produced, and witness or oath again was called for to prove that the defendant's proceedings were correct: Wē cwædon, se ðe t̃yman scolde, ðæt hē hæfde ungeligene gewitnesse ðæs ðæt hē hit on riht t̃ymde, oþþe ðone āð funde ðe se gelyfian mihte ðe on sprece, L. Ed. i. Th. i. 158, 16. If the geteāma, though living, were not brought, according to one regulation the defendant lost his case, and had to resign the property, L. H. E. 7; Th. i. 30, 9; according to another, if he could bring witness to prove the sale, he received the price of the property he had to give up, 16; Th. i. 34, 8. If the geteāma were dead other formalities were prescribed, L. In. 53; Th. i. 134, 17; L. Eth. ii. 9; Th. i. 290, 9. If all the requirements had been satisfied the property in question was handed over to the geteāma: Se ðe yrfē bycge on gewitnesse, and hit eft t̃yman scyle, ðonne onfō se his ðe hē hit ær æt bohte, L. Ath. i. 24; Th. i. 212, 12. Swā ic hit t̃yme swā hit mē se sealde ðe ic hit nū on hand sette, L. O. 3; Th. i. 180, 3; L. Eth. ii. 8; Th. i. 288, 20; and the defendant thereupon appealed to the geteāma to corroborate his statement of the case, 21. If the latter accepted the property, the former was cleared, and the geteāma himself was now in a sinilar position to that in which the defendant had stood, 22; but if he declined to receive it, and declared that it was not the property he had sold, then the defendant had to prove that it was: Gif se mon (the geteāma) onfōn ne wille, and sægh ðæt hē him nāfre ðæt (the property) ne sealde, ac sealde oðer, ðonne mōt se gecyðan, se ðe hit t̃iemþ, ðæt hē him nān oðer ne sealde būton ðæt ilce, L. In. 75; Th. i. 150, 7; cf. 35; Th. i. 124, 10. If however the case were not stopped, the process, in earlier times, was repeated until either there was a failure to produce a geteāma (v. teām-byrst), or the property was traced to some person whose right to its possession was undoubted: Gange se teām ford oþþæt man wite hwær hē oðstande, L. Ed. i. Th. i. 158, 15; L. Eth. ii. 9; Th. i. 290, 3. Betweox teāme gif hwā tō fēhþ, and nā furðor teām ne cenþ, ac āgūian wile, ne mæg mon ðæs wyrnan, gif getryfwe gewitnes him tō āgeununge r̃ymþ, 290, 18. Later teām was necessary only three times: Tyme hit man þrywa, æt ðam fōrdan cyrre āgūige hit, oððe āgyfe ðam ðe hit āge, L. C. S. 24; Th. i. 390, 9. At one time also a change was made in the place where teām should be made: Be teānum. Hwilon stōð ðæt man sceolde þrywa t̃yman ðær hit ærest befangen wære, and syðþan fylgean teāme swā hwær swā man tō cende. Ðā geræddan witan, ðæt hit betere wære, ðæt man æure t̃ymde ðær hit ærest befangen wære . . . ðy lās ðe mon unmihtigne man tō feor and tō lange for his āgenan swenke, L. Eth. ii. 9; Th. i. 288, 28. A case in which a defendant is cleared by his geteāma, who, however, cannot get himself cleared, is given Chart. Th. 206, 19 sqq. A woman had been stolen, and was found in the possession of one Wulfstan. Ðā t̃ymde Wulfstān hine (the woman) tō Æðelstāne; ðā cende hē tēm and lēt ðone forberstan. v. teām-byrst. Another case is mentioned where a bishop was not allowed teām: Ne mōste se biſceop beōn ðara þreora nānes wyrdre ðe eallum leōdſcipe geſeald was on wedde, tale, ne teāmes, ne āhnuaga, 266, 11. (2) The word also occurs often in charters along with sac, sūc, toll, etc., where according to one definition it refers to the right to the forfeitures which were made in the suits where teām was resorted to: Theam, quod si aliquis aliquid intercebat super aliquem, et ipse non poterat warrantum suum habere, erit forisfactura, et justicia similiter de calumpniatore, si deficiat, sua erit, L. Ed. C. 22; Th. i. 452, 1. Donavi abbati . . . consuetudinem que dicitur teames, Chart. Th. 405, 1. v. teām-byrst. A different meaning is given elsewhere to the word. In Cod. Dip. Kmbl. iv. 202, 7 teām occurs, and in the Latin form of the charter is rendered by 'privilegium habendi totam suorum seruatorum propaginem', 203, 6. [O. Frs. tām a bridle; a line of descendants, progeny, family: O. L. Ger. tōm frenum: Du. toom: O. H. Ger. zoum funis, habena: Icel. taumr bridle, rein, cord.] v. bearn, frum—(v. toft. A word apparently of Scandinavian origin, Icel. toft, tuft a piece of ground, messuage, homestead; a place marked out for a house or building; in the special later Icelandic sense a square piece of ground with walls but without roof: Dan. toft an enclosed home-field. It does not occur often in the earliest English, but it is found as the second part of many place-names in districts which were affected by the Danes. v. Taylor's Names and Places. In the Prompt. Parv. toft renders campus; in Piers Plowman it means an elevated piece of ground: I seigh a toure on a toft, Prol. 14; while later, according to Kennett, it is 'a field where a house or building once stood.' In the following passages it may mean the enclosed ground in which the house stood:—Healf ðæt land æt Sūðhām, innur and útur, on tofte and on crofte, Cod. Dip. Kmbl. iii. 317, 7. IV. as a technical term in England. In this connection toll is used to denote not only an amount payable to the king, but also freedom from the payment of such amounts. The word occurs not unfrequently in charters along with sac, socn, teadm, and other terms (v. Cod. Dip. Kmbl. i. xlv). and in the Latin version of an English charter is explained as 'in unendendis et emendis mercibus a tolmeto immunitas,' Cod. Dip. Kmbl. iv. 203, 4-5. In like manner in the Laws of Edward the Confessor it is said: 'Tol, quod nos vocamus theloneum, scilicet libertatem emendi et vendendi in terra sua,' Th. i. 451, 30. Toll could be claimed by the king (1) on sales:—Si in strata publica seu in ripa emporiali quislibet mercatur, thelon ad manum regis subeat; quod si intus in curte praedicta (the bishop of Worcester's) quislibet emerit vel uenderit, thelon debitum ad manum episcopi redatur, Cod. Dip. Kmbl. ii. 119, 7-12. Cf. the grant by Edward in 904 of 'villae mercimonium, quod Anglice ðæs tûnes cýping appellatur,' v. 158, 37; and that by ealdorman Æðelred and Æðelflæd of a half of 'ælc gerihta ðe tó heora hláforddome gebyraþ on ceápstowe,' 142, 33. The following passages give instances of the payment of toll:—Hêr kýð on disere bæc ðæt Leówine and his wif gebohton Ælfilde tó feowér and sixtuge penegon and Ælfríc Hals nam ðæt toll for ðæs kynges hand, Chart. Th. 635, 24; 631, 28; 639, 15; 636, 2. Alword portgeræfa and Alwine fangon tó ðam tolle for ðæs cynges hand, 636, 30. Teolung gebohte Ælword and Ædwine tó .vii. mancon tó cêpe and tó tolle, and Ælword portgeræfa nam ðæt toll, 633, 2-7; 639, 20-24. Æilgyuu álysde Hig and Dunna and heora ofspring tó .xiii. mancon, and Æignulf portgeræfa and Godsuc námon ðæt toll, 638, 12-17. (2) from ships coming into port. For a list of such tolls see L. Eth. iv. 2; Th. i. 300; and for instances of tolls being remitted see Cod. Dip. Kmbl. i. 94, where the toll (vectigal) on one ship entering the port of London is remitted to bishop Aldwulf; i. 101, where the king remits 'naus onustae transvectionis censum qui a theloneariis nostris tributaria exactione impetitur; ut ubique in regno nostrum libera de omni regali fisco et tributo maneat.' See also pp. 114, 116. In a charter of Cnut the tolls of Sandwich are the subject of grant: 'nullus homo habet aliquam consuetudinem in eodem portu exceptis monachis ecclesiae Christi. Eorum autem est nauicula et transfretatio portus et theloneum omnium nauium cuscumque sit et undecumque veniat,' iv. 21. (3) on transport by land or water. See the last passage: 'Eorum est transfretatio portus.' In another charter a grant of land carries with it 'theloneum aquarum,' Cod. Dip. Kmbl. iii. 369, 25. In the charter inserted in the Chronicle under the year 963, se toll of certain streams is the subject of grant, Erl. 123, 2. See Kemble's Saxons in England, ii. 73-78. [O. Sax. toll[1]: O. H. (1) marking rest, in the midst of, in the middle of:—Ðā fundon hiē hīene tōmiddes ðara wietena . . . ðā wæs hē gemēt sittende tōmiddes ðara lāreōwa inueniunt illum sedentem in medio doctorum . . . in medio doctorum sedens inuenitur, Past. 49; Swt. 385, 21-25. lc sette mīne hālgan stōwe tōmiddes eowre (in medio vestri), Lev. 26, 11. Tōmiddes hyra in medio, Jn. topp, es; m. I. a top, summit:—Helmes top apex, summitas galeae, Wrt. Voc. i. 36, 1. II. a lock of hair, tuft; and fig. a collection of rays of light (?), as in the tail of a comet:—Se brōðor geseah eall ðæt hūs mid heofonlicre bryhto geondgoten, and hē ðær geseah fyrenne topp (a stream of light?); cf. Cometa . . . men cweþaþ on Englisc, ðæt hit siē feaxede steorra, for ðæm ðær stent lang leōma of, Chr. 891; Erl. 88, 19. But, perhaps, torr should be read, as the Latin has turrin; and the metrical version of the passage uses that word:—Heofonlic leōma from foldan up swylce fyren tor ryht āræred, Exon. Th. 180, 26; Gū. 1285) up of ðære eorþan tō heofones heānnysse, Guthl. 20; Gdwin. 88, 11.

III. a top to play with (?):—Mid gelædre handa hē swang ðone top mid micelre swiftnysse (the passage is obscure, and perhaps the Latin original has been mistranslated. Thorpe, p. 41, note, cites two Latin versions, one of which has ‘accepto ceromate, cum docta manu circumlavit ei cum subtilitate’; the other ‘accepto cyramocco, docta manu circulauit eum’; in each case the rubbing after the bath seems to be meant. But swingan (q. v.) elsewhere seems always used with the sense of striking, and hardly fits in with the meaning of the Latin), Ap. Th. 13, 13. [In later English the word seems mostly used of the hair at the top of the head, or of that which has a similarity with it, e.g. the leafy top of a tree:—Bi þone toppē (coppe, 2nd MS.) he hine nom, Laym. 684. Hongin bi þe toppē (teon bi þe top up, Bodi. MS.), Jul. 28, 6; Piers P. 3, 139. Top ouer tail, Will. 2776. En vostre chef vs auet toup (a top of heer), Wrt. The word is used also of other things:—Teon seiles to toppa, Laym. 1339. Top or cop of an hey thyngē cacumen, top of a maste carchesia, Prompt. Parv. 496. It is found, too, as the name of a plaything:—En la rue vus iuuetz a toup (a top of tre), Wrt. Voc. i. 144, 25. Top of chyldeys play irochus, Prompt. Parv. 496. Sweype for a top flagellum, 482. *O. Frs. top a lock, tuft of hair: Du. top top, summit: O. H. trehing (but þrihing in Lamarde. v. Schmid, A. S. Gesetz. 508). The form given in L. Ed. C. to the Scandinavian word, which in Icelandic appears as þriðjungr = the third part of a shire:—De treingis. Erant potestates super wapentagiis quas trehingas vocabant, scilicet, terciarum partem provincie, et qui super ipsam dominabantur, trehing-gref . . . Et quod illi vocabant tria hundreda, vel iiiij, vel plura, isti (those of Danish England) vocabant trehing. Et quod trehing non poterat diffiniri, in scira servabatur, L. Ed. C. 31; Th. i. 455, 17–25. In Magna Carta, § 25, trethingii (pl.) occurs. The Anglicized form of the word probably began with þ, and Halliwell gives Thirdings as the term used of the Ridings. The present form, Riding, seems to have arisen from a confusion of the initial dental with the final sound of East, West, North.

borrowing the terms of war:—Sint geþræde þegnas mīne (St. Andrew's disciples), geonge gūdrincas, Andr. Kmbl. 782; An. 391. VI. discipuli ejus, a king's or queen's service, whether in the household or in the country, a thane. The word in this case seems gradually to acquire a technical meaning, and to become a term denoting a class (v. þegen-riht, -wer), containing, however, several degrees. To illustrate the wider sense in which the word could be used, when the þegen is spoken of in relation to the king, the following passages may be cited. In the Chronicle an. 897 'manige ðara sēlestena cynges þēna' includes two bishops and three aldermen, as well as a cynges þegn and a cynges horsþegn. In a charter Cnut greets 'ealle mīne þegnas, twelfhynde and twiwynde' (the twiwynde man is a ceorl: cf. too, 'ealne his leōdscype, twelfhynde and twiwynde,' Chart. Erl. 229, 19), Cod. Dip. Kmbl. iv. 9, 30. The word seems general, too, in the passage, 'Weorðscipes wyrpe ælc be his mæde, eorl and ceorl, þegen and þeoden,' L. R. 1; Th. i. 190, 13. The more limited sense seems to belong to the word in the following:—Gif þegen geþeah ðæt he weard tō eorle, L. R. 5; Th. i. 192, 7. Cf. §§ 2, 6; and see L. In. 45, L. C. S. 72, L. M. L. given below. In some cases, too, it will be seen that the term implies military service, as when de militia regis juvenis is translated sum geong ðæs cyninges ðegin (see also other passages below from Bd. 4, 3, and 5, 13); in others, the service is that of the household, v. Bd. 4, 3; S. 567, 21, and bür-, disc-, hrægl-þegen; in others it is official work in the country. For the development of the class of thanes in England, see Stubbs' Const. Hist. s. v. thegn; Kemble's Saxons in England, l. c. 7, II. c. 3; Schmid, A. S. Gesetz. s. v. þegen. (1) where the word is used of other than Teutonic peoples:—Wæs his (St. Martin's) fæder ærest cyninges þegn, and geðeah ðæt he wæs cininges þegna aldorman, Blickl. Homl. 211, 21. (Cf. His (St. Martin's) fæder wæs æðelboren, ærest cempa, and siddan cempa ealdor, Homl. Th. ii. 498, 25. St. Martin's father was a military tribune.) Þegn satrapa, Wrt. Voc. i. 42, 17. Ealle niht ic (the ox-herd) stande ofer ða oxan waciende for þeófan (propter fures), Coll. Monast. Th. 20, 29. ¶ The passage last cited suggests a state of society in which property was not very secure, and the suggestion seems borne out by the many passages, dealing with thieves, that are to be found in the Laws. Thieving was so far common, that the law enacted: Gif feorrancumen man oþþe fræmde būton wege gange, and hē ðonne nāwder ne hýrme, ne hē horn ne blāwe, for þeóf hē biþ tō prōfianne, L. Wih. 28; Th. i. 42, 23; L. In. 20; Th. i. 114, 15; and on such a scale was it conducted that according to the numbers of the depredators acting together were different terms used of them: Deófas wē hātaþ oð .vii. men; from .vii. hlōð oð .xxxv.; sīþþan biþ here, L. In. 13; Th. i. 110, 13. The frequency of this particular form of crime may also be inferred from the later enactment: Wē wyllaþ ðæt ælc man ofer twelfwintre sylle ðone að, ðæt hē nelle þeóf beón ne þeófes gewita, L. C. S. 21; Th. i. 388, 6. But far stronger measures than the exacting of such an oath were in force. The law made provision for the pursuit of thieves, L. Edg. H. 2; Th. i. 258, 6, and imposed penalties on those who, being summoned, or hearing the hue and cry, neglected to take part in the pursuit, 3; Th. i. 258, 14; L. C. S. 29; Th. i. 392, 17: while a reward was given to him who seized a thief: Se ðe þeóf gefēhþ, hē āh .x. scitt., L. In. 28; Th. i. 120, 5. To let a thief go, when caught, was a crime, L. In. 36; Th. i. 124, 14; so, also, to allow him, when discovered, to escape without raising hue and cry, L. C. S. 29; Th. i. 392, 14: to harbour a thief, except in those cases where the right of asylum might for three or nine days be extended to him, was to become liable to the fate of a thief, L. Ath. iii. 6; Th. i. 219, 6; iv. 4; Th. i. 224, 4: v. 1, 2; Th. i. 228, 21; to fight for him was equally penal, v. 1, 3; Th. i. 228, 23; v. 8, 3; Th. i. 236, 18. And the laws which affected the thief himself were very severe. Any one above the age of twelve, who was caught stealing property above the value of eight pence, was liable to capital punishment, L. Ath. i. 1; Th. i. 198, 15; according to other regulations, for a theft which, on conviction, rendered the thief liable to be slain, the limit of age was made fifteen years, L. Ath. v. 12, 1; Th. i. 240, 28, and the limit of value was twelve pence, L. Ath. v. 1, 1; Th. i. 228, 12: v. 12, 3; Th. i. 242, 8. The extreme penalty was not in all cases exacted; but in case of repeated conviction there was to be no remission, L. Ath. v. 1, 4; Th. i. 230, 3. Cf. too the passages: Gesēce æbera þeóf ðæt ðæt hē gesēce, oððe se ðe on hlāfordsearwe gemet sý, ðæt hī nāfre feorh ne gesēcen, būton se cynning him searhgerenes unne, L. Edg. ii. 7; Th. i. 268, 22; L. C. S. 26; Th. i. 390, 27. Sý hē þeóf, and þolige heáfdes and calles ðæs ðe hē áge, L. Edg. S. 11; Th. i. 276, 13. The kinds of death mentioned in L. Ath. iii. 6; Th. i. 219, are throwing from a rock or drowning in the case of a free woman; in the case of a servus homo, stouing by slaves; in that of a serva ancilla, burning. Further a thief who was taken in the act, or taken in flight, or who resisted, instead of being handed over to justice (on cyninges bende, L. In. 15; Th. i. 112, 4: se cynning āh ðone þeóf, 28; Th. i. 120, 6), might be slain without the intervention of the law, and the death called for no 'wergild', L. Wih. 25; Th. i. 42, 13; L. In. 12; Th. i. 110, 7: 16; Th. i. 112, 7: 35; Th. i. 124, 6: L. Ath. i. 1; Th. i. 198, 20; and in cases of flight or resistance the fact that the value of the stolen property was less than twelve pence was to be no bar to the slaying, L. Ath. v. 12, 3; Th. i. 242, 10. He who struck down a thief in public was rewarded: Se ðe þeóf fylle beforan oðrum mannum, ðæt hē wære of ūre ealra feó .xii. pænġ ðe betera for ðære dæda and don anġinne, L. Ath. v. 7; Th. i. 234, 22. Short of death were the punishments of selling into slavery, of imprisonment, fine, and mutilation: Gif man frigne man æt hæbbendre handa geið, ðanne wealde se cýning þreora ānes: oþþe hine man cwele, oþþe ofer sǣ selle, oþþe hine his wergelde ālese, L. Wih. 26; Th. i. 42, 15. Gif þeóf sié gefongen, swelte hē deaðe oþþe his lif be his were man ālese, L. In. 12; Th. i. 110, 8. Gif man þeóf on carcerne gebringe, ðæt hē beó .xl. nihta on carcerne, and hine mou ðonne ālyse fū mid .cxx. scift., L. Ath. i. 1; Th. i. 198, 21. Cutting off the hand or foot of a 'cirlics þeóf' is mentioned, L. In. 18; Th. i. 114, 5: 37; Th. i. 124, 20. The same punishment is mentioned, L. C. S. 30; Th. i. 394, 10; and in aggravated cases the more severe sentence was passed, that the eyes were to be put out, and the nose, ears, and upper lip to be cut off, ib. An instance of punishment for theft, in which the eyes were put out and the ears cut off after (wrongful) conviction is given, Homl. Skt. i. 21, 265. If the thief managed to escape, he was declared an outlaw: Beó se þeóf fūlah wið eall folc, L. C. S. 30; Th. i. 394, 24. v. Grmm. R. A. 635 sqq.; Schmid, A. S. Gesetz. s. v. þeóf-feng, es; m. Seizing of thieves; the Latin rendering of the term in Charters is comprehensio (or captio) furis (-um). I. The word seems to denote the obligation of one who holds land to arrest and bring to justice those who committed theft on that land, and occurs generally in connection with the burdens from which land, when granted, was relieved:—Ic forgyfe ðisne freóls tō ðære hālgan stowe æt Scireburnan, ðæt hit sý gefreóð ealra cynelica and ealra dōnlicra þeówdōma, ge þeóffenges ge æghwelcra [un]jēðnesse ealles worlðlices broces, nymde fyrde and byrceowenes, Chart. Corresponding cases in Latin charters are the following:—Ego Ecgberhtus . . . hanc libertatem donabi ecclesiae . . . ut omnes agros sint libera ab omni regali seruitio (then follows a list of exemptions), . . . et ab omnibus difficultatibus regalis uel secularis seruitutis, cum furis comprehensione intus et foris, praeter pontis constructione et expeditione liberata permaneat, Cod. þeór, es (?), e (?), gender is uncertain: in the following passages, which might be decisive, the forms are doubtful:—Wiþ þeóre drenc, and eft wiþ þære (if þære refers to þeór the word would be feminine, but perhaps þeóre should be read; cf. the text: Wyrce góðne ðeódrrenc . . . Wiþ þeóre and sceótendum wenne, 324, 15–25) and sceótendum wenne and eft beþing wiþ þam (the þeþing is for þeór, v. 326, 3, so if þam refers to þeór the word is masc. or neuter) gif þeór gewunige on ānre stówe, Lchdm. ii. 300, 30. It seems to denote an inflamed swelling or ulcer; it is mentioned in connection with wens (Lchdm. ii. Bk. ii. § 30, 31); in reference to the eye it is said to be the same as 'fig' (ii. 38, 5), and is mentioned in close connection with the same disease (iii. 30, 3–16); the same prescription is good 'wið ðam micclan lice and wið oþrum giccendum blece and þeórgeride' (iii. 70, 28); þeórwyr is used against hreófl (ii. 78, 13); purgative and emetic drinks are used for its cure (ii. 115, 23), and bleeding (118, 21; 120, 12), cupping (120, 16), and fomentation (326, 3) are prescribed:—Gif þeór gewunige on ānre stówe, wyrce beþinge, Lchdm. ii. 326, 2; iii. 30, 6. ¶ Slavery, which is mentioned by Tacitus (Germania, cc. 24, 25) as existing among the Germans, is recognized by the earliest English laws, and early traces of it are to be found in the English slaves whom Gregory saw at Rome. It was a condition that was due to many causes. The fortune of war might put life and liberty at the disposal of another, as in the case of the Northumbrian, Imma, who, falling into the hands of a hostile Mercian, was by him sold to a Frisian, Bd. 4, 22. Kidnapping, to judge by Theodore's Penitential, was not unknown: Si quis Christianus alterum Christianum vagantem reppererit, eumque furatus fuerit, ac venderit, Th. ii. 50, § 5; and cf. Earme men beswicene and hreðwlíce besyrwde, and út of ðisan earde gesealde swýðe unforworhte fremdum tō gewearde, Wulfst. 158, 13. Freedom might be forfeited as the punishment of crime; e.g. Gif hwā stalie on gewitnesse ealles his hīrēdes, gongen hiē ealle on þeowot .x. wintre cniht mæg biōn þiēfde gewita, L. In. 7; Th. i. 107, 16; and cf. Wulfst. 158, 14. Gif se frigea on Sunnandæg wyrce, þolie his frēoles, L. In. 3; Th. i. 104, 6. See also L. Eth. vii. 16; Th. i. 332, 18. v. wite-þeow. Again, the power which one relative had over another was at times exercised to enslave the latter. A child of less than seven years might, in case of need, be sold by its father: Se fæder his sunu, gif him mycel neōd byþ, hē hine mōt on þeowet gesyllan ðæt ðæt hē biþ .vii. winter; ofer ðæt, būtan ðæs suna willan, hē hine ne mōt syllan, L. Ecg. C. 27; Th. ii. 152, 17: L. Th. P. 19, 28; Th. ii. 19, § 28. Cf. L. Alf. 12; Th. i. 46, 12. The sale of kindred is elsewhere, and not without occasion, denounced: Gif hwylc cristen man his āgen bearn, oððe his nēstan mæg wið ānigum wurde sylle, næbbe hē nāne gemānan mid cristenum mannum, ær hē hine ālysed hæbbe of ðam þeowdōme, L. Ecg. P. 26; Th. ii. 212, 8; cf. Wē witan ful georne, hwær seōd yrmþ gewearð, ðæt fæder gesealde bearn wið weorde, and bearn his mōdor, and brōðor oþerne fremdum tō gewearde, Wulfst. 161, 6. Further, slavery was at times entered into voluntarily; such cases seem contemplated in Theodore's Penitential: Homo .xiii. annorum sese potest servum facere, Th. ii. 19, § 29; and that such cases did occur may be seen from the following passage: Geatfleda geaf frēols . . . ealle ða men ðe heō nam heora heāfod for hyra mete (cf. On .xii. mōndum ðū scealt sillan ðinum þeowan men .vii. hund hlāfa and .xx. hlāfa, būton morge[n]metum and nōnmetum, Salm. Kmbl. p. 192, 18) on ðam yflum dagum, Chart. Th. 621, 9. And besides the causes enumerated there was that which must have been the most efficient—birth; the child of slaves was itself a slave: cf. the phrase in the document last cited, in which freedom is given to certain persons and to 'eall heora ofspring, boren and unboren.' See also þeow-boren. The terms used in connection with the slave shew him to be the property of his master: Gif þeūw stele and hine man ācwele, ðam āgende hine man healfne āgelde, L. Wih. 27; Th. i. 42, 20. Gif hwylc man his æht (servum) ofslýhþ, L. Ecg. P. ii. 3; Th. ii. 182, 29: L. M. I. P. 11; Th. ii. 268, 9. Weron ðær ðeow witeþeowe men būrbærde and ðreō ðeowberde; ða mē salde biscoop tō ryhtre æhta, and hire teām, Chart. Th. 152, 22. Bought and sold like an animal, his treatment in other respects was that of an animal. Tacitus (Germania, c. 25) had remarked that the Germans often killed their slaves on the impulse of passion, and that it was done with impunity. The same might be said of the English: Gif hwylc man his æht (servum suum) ofslýhþ, and hē nāne gewitnyse næbbe ðæt hē forworht sig, būtan hē hine for his hātheortnesse and for gýmleaste ofslýhþ, L. Ecg. P. ii. 3; Th. ii. 182, 29: L. M. I. P. 11; Th. ii. 268, 9: L. Th. P. 21, 12; Th. ii. 23, § 12. Gif hwylc wif for hwylcum lyprum andan hire wifman swinþ, and heō þurh ða swingle wyrð deað, and heō unscyldig biþ, L. Ecg. P. ii. 4; Th. ii. 182, 32: L. M. I. P. 12; Th. ii. 268, 11: L. Th. P. 21, 13; Th. ii. 24, 1. The inferiority of the slave is marked in many ways by the law. The price of redemption in the case of the þeow who stole was seventy shillings, L. Wih. 27; Th. i. 42, 20; in the case of the free man it was 120 shillings, L. Ath. i. 1; Th. i. 198, 23. Deowas wegreaf sē .iii. scillingas, L. Ethb. 89; Th. i. 24, 16; in the case of the ceorl it is six shillings, 19; Th. i. 8, 1. Gif þeow steleþ .ii. gelde gebēte, 90; Th. i. 24, 17. Gif frigan frēum steld, .iii. gebēte, 9; Th. i. 6, 2. So, too, in the matter of punishments; where the freeman can pay a fine, the slave pays with his hide, i.e. is scourged; see L. In. 3; Th. i. 104, 2: L. E. G. 7; Th. i. 172, 1: 8; Th. i. 172, 6: L. C. S. 45; Th. i. 402, 15: L. In. 13; 15; Th. i. 40, 7, 11. Gif þeow man fūl wurde . . . swinge hine man þriwa, L. Ath. i. 19; Th. i. 208, 22. Or mutilation was inflicted, where a freeman was fined, L. Alf. pol. 25; Th. i. 78, 14. The manner in which the punishment of death was executed was an ignominious one—stoning by slaves, L. Ath. iii. 6; Th. i. 219, 13; v. 6, 3; Th. i. 234, 8. The slave could not be vouched to warranty, L. In. 47; Th. i. 132, 5; and he was not allowed the holidays given to freemen, L. Alf. pol. 43; Th. i. 92, 3. Three days, however, in the year were granted, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before Michaelmas: Sit omnis servus liber ab opere illis tribus diebus, quo melius jejunaie possit, et operetur sibiimet quod vult, L. Eth. viii. 2; cf. Wulfst. 181, 18; and one of Alfred's laws speaks of fragments of time in which it was possible for the slave to earn something: Æghwæt ðæs ðe ðeowum monnum ānig mon for Godes noman geselle, oþþe hiē on ānigum hiora hwilticcum gearnian mægen, L. Alf. pol. 43; Th. i. 92, 12. It was thus possible for a slave to acquire property, and the church endeavoured to render his possession secure: Ne biþ ālyfð æt ðam þeowan his feoh tō nimanne, ðæt hē mid his swynce begiteþ, L. Ecg. P. Addit. 35; Th. ii. 238, 6: L. Th. P. 19, 30; Th. ii. 19, § 30. Throughout the influence of the church seems to have been exerted in favour of the slave. þorp, þorp, es; m. Perhaps the idea at first connected with the word is that of an assemblage, cf. the use in Icelandic: Maðr heitir einnhver . . . þorp ef þrír ero, Skáldskaparmál; þyrpast to crowd, throng; þyrping a crowd: later the word may have been used of the assemblage of workers on an estate, and also of the estate on which they worked; all three ideas seem to be implied in one or other of the following glosses:—Tuun, þorp, dorp conpetum, Txts. 53, 557: Wrt. Voc. ii. 15, 7. Comptum i. villa vel þingstow vel þorp, 132, 56. Prop fundus, i. 37, 51. The idea of an estate belongs to the word in Gothic: þaurp ni gastaistald ἀγρὸν οὐκ ἐκτρησάμεν, Neh. 5, 16. In the end the meaning came to be hamlet, village, in which sense it remained for some time in English, e.g.: Ic Ædgar gife freedom Scē Petres mynstre Medeshamstede of kyng and of biscop, and ealle þa þorpes þe ðæro lin: ðæt is, Æstfeld and Dodesþorp and Ege and Pastun, Chr. 963; Erl. 121, 4. He com to Bethgafe, swo hatte þe þorp, O. E. Homl. ii. 89, 13. Ther stod a throp . . . in which that poure folc hadden her bestes and her herberge, Chauc. Cl. T. 199. Thorp, litell towne or thoroughfare oppidum, Prompt. Parv. 492. The word is now obsolete, but it remains in a great many local names, either alone or in composition; though, as such names are found mostly in those parts of England which were affected by the Danes, its occurrence in them may be due rather to Scandinavian than to English influence. v. Leo, Anglo-Saxon Names of Places, p. 43 sqq.; Taylor's words and Places, s.v. [Goth. þaurp: O. Frs. thorp, therp: O. L. Ger. thorp, tharp: Du. dorp: O. H. Cf. too, O. H. Ger. drilero triplici (catena). On the other hand it might seem that the form is þri-li from comparison with æn-li simplex, Txs. 115, 156; cf. too, O. H. He is the only one of the courtiers who is actually stated to have addressed Beowulf, so that the duty of leading the conversation seems to have fallen to him. If a gloss in Wrt. Voc. ii. 25, 31—descarris hof-ðelum—may be read de scarris of ðelum (= ðýlum) or hofðýlum, perhaps his function was something like that of the later court jester, and the style of his attack on Beowulf hardly contradicts the supposition.
